BOROUGH MARKET LONDON

Borough has long been synonymous with food markets as far back as 1014, and probably much earlier, London Bridge attracted traders selling grain, fish, vegetables and livestock. In the 13th century traders were relocated to what is now Borough High Street and a market has existed there ever since. In 1755, the market was closed by Parliament, but a group of Southwark residents raised £6,000 to buy a patch of land known locally as 'The Triangle', once the churchyard of St Margaret's, and reopened the market. The Triangle is still at the heart of the market today, which feeds this core community and has now grown to over 100 individual stalls.

Alongside the original fruit, vegetables, bakers and butchers, we now sell a huge variety of British and international produce. All of our traders share a love of food and many of them make, grow or rear the produce they sell so now, just as in 1755, our customers know exactly where their shopping has come from. The market ensures high standards of produce by employing a food quality panel of impartial experts who ensure that the taste, provenance and quality of foods sold are all regularly measured and maintained and small traders are helped to meet these standards. Apart from the guarantees of freshness, variety, competitiveness and quality, Borough Market is most recognised for its vibrant and friendly atmosphere and it will always be at the heart of the local community. Its unique standing within the area has recently been marked by an English Heritage Blue Plaque, voted for by the people of Southwark, marking its place as London's oldest fruit and vegetable market.
